I do not see how breaking up a company, that does great work, will help anyone. I believe good competition is the answer and that only makes the playing field level for all players.

I think if the company could make it's products more interchangeable with other computers, they would still come out the winners, but let the other companies attempt to compete on the same playing field.

We need more competition, not laws to limit peoples initiatives and work and excel in their particular field. How would we be where we are without this great incentive to be the best.
